Equitable Treatment of Students

It is imperative that all your students receive equitable treatment. You may be tempted to allow certain students to retake exams, turn work in late, or do extra work, but such practices can result in student grievances and even litigation. You should present a comprehensive syllabus at the beginning of the term and apply it consistently. Reasonable accommodation of disabled students is not considered inequitable treatment.